

A COWARDLY PARTY.

Senator Jones said that the Republican party which dared to face the slavery question does not to-day dare face the money power of Wall Street. The Cleveland Convention demonstrated the truth of Jones' utterance.

In the future it will be quite the thing when a political party, in convention assembled, desires to show its approval of a certain question, to not mention the subject. The Republican national league, which met in Cleveland last week, put in its whole time in debating the silver issue in committee, but did not dare to bring it up in open convention for fear that some hot-headed silver crank might be present who would place the question above the Republican party and offer a resolution in its favor, and in that way precipitate a general debate and force the organization to face the issue one way or the other. The only way this could be avoided was for the committee on resolutions to offer a report in which the silver question was not mentioned, and then for the report to be voted out of order on the plea that the convention was just a friendly gathering in which members of the G. O. P. had assembled for the purpose of putting their heads together to figure out the best plan to again fool the people in 1896.

Correct.

All of the great Republican organs have been denouncing the Democratic party during the past two years because of their fear of facing the great questions of the day, but now when the Republican party is brought face to face with the silver question, they dare not say anything, but ask for delay in the vain hope that time may change the issue so that it can be avoided in the campaign. Papers of the West who claim to be silver papers also approve of the policy pursued by the conventions. This shows that they are simply political pap suckers and should not be supported by their constituents. A brave, outspoken enemy can be respected, but a halting, vacillating, facing both ways friend can only be despised. The Republican party had a great opportunity to show its bravery and prove that it was not afraid of the American voters, but it allowed the chances to pass and the result will be that the people will have no confidence in it in the future.—Silver State.

Grand Jury Report.

The Grand Jury of Elko county in submitting its report to Judge Talbot contained the following:

"Our attention has been called to a violation of the license laws of the State by the Pullman Palace Car Company, and upon consideration and advice of the District Attorney, the whole matter was referred to the proper authorities for investigation with instructions to report to the next Grand Jury."

It will be seen by a correspondence in another column between Controller LaGrave and Attorney General Beatty that the Controller has no legal authority for paying a portion of the salaries of the Auditor, Assessor and Treasurer. The law of '65 was repealed in '91 and all money paid out since '91 from the State Treasury to the officers of the various counties has been disbursed without the slightest authority of law.

The example which James Lick set to his rich countrymen is one that unfortunately has found too few imitators. A score or more of California millionaires have passed to their last account since he died, but how rare are the benefactors of a public character they have left behind them? The most notable is the trust creating a great university by the late Leland Stanford. Sharou provided for a children's play ground, but that, it is claimed, was an afterthought of his heirs. To recall at random the names of a few of the rich men who have died without leaving to the people any portion of their vast wealth there may be mentioned Michael Brown, James C. Flood, William O'Brien, James G. Fair, Nicholas Luning, Thomas Blythe, Mark Hopkins, Charles L. Crocker and W. Hobart. The memory of James Lick will smell sweet, and blossom in the dust for ages after the names of the California group of deceased millionaires are forgotten.—Stockton Mail.

The silver men in the Republican League Convention at Cleveland were sat down upon, and the only thing left them is to lick the hand that smites them and renew their pledge of fealty to the grand old goldbug party.
